no jurisdiction in the matter, which properly came under the jurisdiction of United States Commissioner Muirhead, of Jersey City, to whom he referred them. The inspectors entered the house on their authority as United States marshals, and having scarched the lower story in vain, were about to begin in the apartment occupied by the dying man, when the vizorous, almost peremptory remarks of Dr. St. John induced them to desist.

Hardly had the inspectors ceased from their unpleasant task, after Mr. Lounsbery died, when a new trouble for the sorrowing family arose in the shape of a controversy about the body. Coroner Henry Herring, of Hillsdale, who had come to Hackensack on hearing of the shooting, and had remained at the Mansion House all night awaiting the death, appeared on the scene, and ordering the undertaker, Ricardo, not to touch the body under penalty of the law, began to hold an informal inquest by questioning the sixteen-year-old daughter of Mr. Lounsbery-Justice Cummings had viewed the body soon after death, and had given Mr. Ricardo a certaficate of death by suicide, with which he was able to set at defiance the authority of the Coroner, and proceed with the embalming. Mr. Herring, however, did not giving up the idea of holding an inquest till late in the afternoon, when he found himself so strongly opposed by public sentiment that he yielded his claim to an inquest, and the accompanying fee, and went back to his home in Hillsdale.

The body was then embalmed, and under the direction of Mr. Leunsbery's brother, Louis Lounsbery, of Randall, Montgonery County, N. Y., who had come in the forenoon, the undertaker was enabled to go on with the preparations for the funeral, which will take pince at 2 o'clock Inesiay afternoon at the house. Mr. Lounsbery's partner in the grain and feed business, maintains that Mr. Lounsbery could have made good any shortage in his accounts at the Postofice by drawing upon his share in the grain business Mr. Lounsbery's part of the annual profits of which, he says, is $14,000

His two children by his first wife, Miss Georgie, age cighteen, and Frank, age twelve, attended the public school.

The present Mrs. Lounsbery was formerly Miss Carrie Wyatt, and was an actress. She began her career on the stage with John McCullongh in San Francisco. She came East in 1867, and was the first Rebecca in "Sam'l of Posen." She played at the Madison Square Theatre in "Young Mrs. Winthrop" and other pieces, and remained in the company until her matringe.

Every one who knows the family well, including Mrs. Holly, Mrs. St. John and a score of neighbors, say that there is not a particle of truth in the statements regarding Mr. Lounsbery's being on anything experiting Mr. Lounsbery's being on anything expert the most affectionate and happy terms with his wife, whom they esteem as a woman entitled to the highest respect and admiration.

No one was more surprised than ex-Postmaster-General James at the news of the defalcation and saicide. He spoke of Lounsbery as a "boy," whom he had known and trusted for many years. "His father," he added, when talking to a Tribune reporter at the Lincoln Bank, "has been one of my dearest friends. He was long one of the most prominent mea in Montgomery County, an intimate friend of Cernor Morgan and other well-known men. He is now almost eighty years old, and I fear the sheek will kih him. I first appointed Mr. Lounsbery a receiving elerk in the registry department in 1873. He was then a young man of ittle more than twenty years, when he was transferred to the cashier's department as clerk. He proved to be efficient, and was soon promoted to be assistant cashier, Mr. Pearson appointed him to succeed Harvey Major in 1883 as cashier, and that position he has held ever since.

"I have not seen him much of late. I believe the last time he called upon me was about three months ago, when he brought me the final accounts of Mr. Pearson. He was then in good spirits, although he told me that he had been suffering from rheumatic gout. He was, as you know, ambitious to become postmaster under the present Administration, and I believe the disappointment so seriously affected his mind that he became insanc. I am confirmed in this belief by his partner in business. Although he had money due him from the firm as his part of the receipts, he has never drawn upon it.

Mr. James said that Mr. Lounsbery had three brothers, Louis, Thurlow Weed and Willard B. who are now at home. He had been twice married, his first wife having been a Miss Jennie Bartlett, of Hudson County. He had had two children by his first wife and one child by his present one. "His defalcation has been a great blow to me," said Mr. James, "as I trusted him implicitly, and believed him to be as honest as the day is long. Nothing could have surprised me more than this."

One of the officers in the Postoflice department.

shared in Mr. James steller that Mr. Launscery had been insare. "He seemed to be a monomaniae on the subject of his appointment as postmaster," he said, "It was a subject to which he constantly referred, and in a manner that showed the sick condition of his mind. This was especially noticeable after his attack of the grip. His state of health was very bad in consequence, and his eyes and ears were seriously affected. I induced him to place himself under treatment at the eye and ear hospital a short time ago. But I was surprised beyond measure and beyond words at the disclosures. I had known him for years and had been associated with him daily, and had the deepest faith in his uprightness and honesty. How this came about, what caused it and how it was done, I am unable to say. He was disappointed in his desire for appointment as Postmaster; there seems to be no other explanation than that of insanity on this account.

sanity on this account."

Canolobaric, N. Y., Jan. 25.—Great astonishment and excitement prevails in Montgomery County over the defalcation and suicide of George II. Lounsbery, cashier of the Postofice in New-York. His father, Thurlow Lounsbery, formerly of the New-York Custom House, and his mother still reside at Randall. The family were notified last night of their son's dishonor and were overwhelmed with crief. The dead man was the main hope of his parents' declining years, and they refuse to believe that he had defaulted to the extent claimed, saying there must be an error somewhere. He always here an excellent reputation at home.

THE WAYS OF THE NATIVE AFRICAN.

HERBERT WARD DESCRIBES THEM TO THE YOUNG MEN'S HEBREW ASSOCIATION.

Traveffers' tales, whatever may have been their characteristic in the time of Sir John Mandeville, have nowadays generally the merit of being true; and few explorers of Africa can tell a better story, or one more abounding in interest, than Herbert Ward. He lectured last night in the beautiful hall of the Lenox Lyceum before a large audience composed of the members and friends of the Young Men's Hebrew Association of New-York. His subject was and picture he illustrated the strange ways of the and Gorging Jimmle in Thackeray's ballad, "Us Must Eat We!" Mr. Ward had plenty of chances to turn cannibal had he been so disposed. A request for provisions from one of the tribes he visited was answered by the proffer of a live, yelping terrier and a few chunk of prime man-fiesh. To Mr. Ward, who was brought up on "the roast beef of old England," this hospitality was alarming rather than inviting. He forgot to tell his hearers which of the two kinds of meast These charming savages do not confine their diet

He says that Lounsbery had no urgent use for money. It was the universal opinion that if his accounts were short he must have spent the money outside of Hackensack. The disappointment was lessened, however, by the animation of the final debate on the Socialist bill in the House, the orations arising to the historic interest of the occasion. Herr liebel, the Socialist, opened the debate. He denied that State persecution effected anything toward the destruction of socialism. He was not surprised that the Government sought to render the not surprised that the Government sought to render the suppression law permanent, but the Social Democracy, he declared, was indestructible. The proceedings of the Government toward the Socialists recalled the mediacyal per-cention of heretics. If the masses were incapable, as the Government alleged, of forming a political judgment, it was the fault of the Government. Even the simplest minds among the working men would become enlightened as soon as the burder of the lately voted taxes, which amount to million of marks, was brought home to them. Necessity taught men to think. It was to be placed to the tanget men to think. It was to be placed to the credit of the Social Democracy, Herr Bebel continued, that Anarchism had disappeared. a passing angler.

In contrast with all this demonstrative philanthropy ronsider the example of the cat. The cat has retenue. He has his hours of sportiveness, as Montaigne observed: 'thus freely speaketh Montaigne about cats,' says Izaak Walton. He will not disturb himself at other moments for anybody. The blandishments of strangers he neither shans nor seeks—he endures them. He is not the victim of the craze for society. He suffices for himself. He is never hored with his own company. Of all animals he alone attains to the contemplative tife. He recards the wheel of existence from willout, like the Enddin. There is no pretence of sympathy about the cat. He lives 'alone, aloff, sublime," in a wise passiveness. If you tread on a dog's tail by accident, he utters "the livine ery," and then dissolves in the elegies of apology. The cat suffers and is silent, or firmly applies his claws without remark. He is excessively prond; and, when he is made the subject of conversation, will cast one glames of soon and leave the room in which personalities are bandied. He disdains accomplishments, and it is a fact that cats are losing the act of puring. All expressions of conston he scouts as frivolous and insincere, except, indeed, in the ambrosial night, when, free from the society of mankind, be pours forth his soul in strains of unpremeditated art. The paltry pay and paltry passes of humanity he deepieses, like Engar Pee. He does not exhibit the pageant of his bleeding heart; he does not now when people die, or explose in cries of delight when his master returns from a journey. With milet courtesy he remains in his proper and comfortable place, only venturing into view when something he approves of, such as fish or game, makes its appearance. On the rights of property he is firm; if a strange cat enters his domain, he is an in chass to resist hysisen. He is the reverse of the bandleoof, if that animal is correctly described by the poet as a width expression.

From The Washington Pest.

A middle need man, with slightly gray hair and mustache, standing in "The Post" counting room last evening, his crippled legs reinforced by a pair of crutches, was suddenly, without a second's premonition, stricken stone blind. He was Mr. Henry Dodge, of No. Pl1 Fourth-st. He had just got a copy of yesterday's paper, and had scarcely rested his eyes on it when the paper dropped from his hands, and
